

Hammaad Khalid, MD

Resident Doctor (Medicine)

Leeds Teaching Hospitals NHS Trust, United Kingdom

Dr. Hammaad Khalid is an early-career physician working as a Resident Doctor in Medicine at Leeds Teaching Hospitals NHS Trust. He graduated from the University of Nottingham and has gained clinical experience across a broad range of medical specialties within the NHS.

He has a developing interest in medical education and clinician wellbeing, with a focus on improving training environments, supporting junior doctors, and contributing to a more sustainable and supportive medical workforce. His clinical experience has provided him with exposure to acute and general medical care within a large tertiary teaching hospital setting.

Dr. Khalid is committed to continuous professional development and is particularly interested in the intersection of education, wellbeing, and clinical performance in modern healthcare systems. He aims to further develop these interests as he progresses in his medical career.